in homage to the radical power of art living while black celebrates the small acts of resistance that comprise the daily lives of black folks by presenting them in a series of vivid illustrations laughing grieving being a kid even the purest expression of pleasure the most human display of sorrow or the simplest delight of childhood is an act of resistance if you happen to be black this immersive hardcover book features forty defiantly joyful illustrations by artist and educator ajuan mance each artwork depicting a person of african descent going about their everyday business begun as mance's personal response to the groundswell of black lives matter protests in 2020 living while black denounces the excessive surveillance harassment and violence aimed at black folks engaged in the activities of everyday life and celebrates the courage and resilience of the black community fittingly the book also features a foreword from alicia garza blm founder and principal at the black futures lab mance's thoughtful meditation on what it's like to be black in america makes a wonderful tool for teachers students activists and parents navigating conversations about racism and resistance powerful message in the contrast between the colorful illustrations and the weighty subject matter a powerful message emerges no matter how strong the forces of oppression black people will persist in striving for justice equality and joy the book itself is also a reminder that there are many ways to be an activist from marching for what you believe in to spreading a message with your art vibrant artwork bright colors bold shapes vivid patterns ajuan mance's artwork speaks to the enduring power and importance of joy as an exceptional teaching tool to provide context for the artwork. mance has compiled a timeline of recent events that lend urgency to the fight for black lives. she highlights the ways that the conversation has shifted since cell phones allowed bystanders to document instances of racial injustice and violence and offers an entry point for anyone who wants to learn about the roots of contemporary racial justice movements. perfect for activists and agitators, art book lovers, students of black history, teachers, and parents looking for colorful ways to talk to young people about activism and resistance.

risk avoidance currently seems to be the patent remedy for all our problems. central banks are attempting to defend our banking and economic systems from current threats by throwing vast amounts of money in their way while politicians demonstrate benevolence in attempts to counter today's social ills to sweep them under the carpet as one might say. a general desire to keep going as normal certainly appears prevalent without risk however there can be no progress, no learning, no insight. markus krall, bestselling author and one of the most insightful connoisseurs of the risk landscape, shows how currently unfolding distortions in business and politics, rapid technological development and geostrategic mistakes could lead us to catastrophe. he also shows where and how we can intervene to put our society on a new and better footing.

marc dollinger charts the transformation of american jewish political culture from the cold war liberal consensus of the early postwar years to the rise and influence of black power inspired ethnic nationalism. he shows how in a period best known for the rise of black antisemitism and the breakdown of the black jewish alliance, black nationalists enabled jewish activists to devise a new judeo-centered political agenda including the emancipation of soviet jews, the rise of jewish day schools, the revitalization of worship services with gender inclusive liturgy and the birth of a new form of american zionism undermining widely held beliefs about the black jewish alliance. dollinger describes a new political consensus based on identity politics that drew blacks and jews together and altered the course of american liberalism.

for me it begins in such an ordinary way with a gorilla, a blonde, and a gun. mid 20th century hollywood, raymond chandler's la before pilates and cell phones. clancy sigal, who would later be the inspiration for doris lessing's saul green, is just back from fighting in the second world war and an abortive solo attempt to assassinate hermann goering at the nuremberg trials. charming his way into a job as an agent with the sam jaffe agency, sigal plunges into a chaotic hollywood peopled by fast women, washed up screenwriters, wily directors, and starstruck fbi agents trailing subversives. he parties with the likes of humphrey bogart, barbara stanwyck, tony curtis and an anxious peter lorre who becomes a drinking buddy but this is the era of the hollywood blacklist and sigal like many of his contemporaries is subpoenaed to testify before the huac will he give up the list of nine names burning a hole in his pocket to save his own skin hilarious touching intimate and revealing sigal s memoir reads like a forgotten hardboiled detective novel and has all the makings of an instant classic
